He asked the fire chief what temperature the book paper was burning at and received the answer: 451 degrees Fahrenheit. He liked the title so much that he didn't bother to see if it was the right temperature. Although there is no standard test to determine the ignition temperature, 451F has been measured according to the ignition temperature of the paper. See also » Guy Montag was not black in the book. It stars Michael B. Jordan, Michael Shannon, Sofia Boutella, Lilly Singh, Grace Lynn Kung and Martin Donovan. Set in the future of America, the film follows a firefighter whose job it is to burn books that are now illegal, just a matter for society after meeting a young woman. The film, which aired at the 2018 Cannes Film Festival, aired on HBO on May 19, 2018. Plot in the future, after the Second Civil War, most reading in America is limited to the Internet, called the 9, and most books are prohibited (except for significantly simplified versions of books like the Bible, the Lighthouse and Moby Dick). [1] The books are ordered by firefighters, who are part of the ministry, a totalitarian dictatorship that blames unhappiness, mental illness, and conflicting opinions on reading bad literature. Guy Montag, a Cleveland firefighter, continues his work without question, thinking he's following in the captain's footsteps to serve and protect society. That all changes when he meets an informant named Clarisse, who questions his actions and beliefs by sharing with him the true history of America and the rise of the ministry. [2] When he finally decides to rebel and understands how he reads the Eels (book reader outcasts) to read, he comes to the realization now he wants to read it. Montag decides to help a rebel who has a plan to reproduce the information through the animals. This rebel group encoded books in the DNA of a bird so it could live on and survive the efforts of firefighters. Montag was supposed to steal a transponder from the fire department to attach it to the bird so it could be placed by a team of scientists who would hand over the DNA. After Montag steals the transponder, Beatty will marry him and confirm his intentions on whether Montag wants to burn a book. Firefighters go to Montag's house and find a big hiding place. Beatty orders him to start burnt down the hideout. Montag remembers that Captain Beatty was one of a group of firefighters who beat his father because he was an eel and suddenly became rebellious and immediately stops burning the books. Montag confronts Captain Beatty, who erases his identity. After he has burned a firefighter alive, he finds himself on the run and eventually comes into contact with the group of eels. The eels' house was discovered by firefighters; Montag finds the bird and places a transponder in it to find its way to Canadian scientists. Captain Beatty confronts him and tries to stop him, but allows the bird to fly away. After Montag releases the bird, Beatty will burn him alive in a rage. The starling makes it to Canada and joins a huge starlings. Cast: Michael B. Jordan were included in the film, and Jordan was executive producer. [5] In June, Sofia Boutella joined the project, [6] playing YouTube personality Lilly Singh as a vlogger, [7] and Laura Harrier became Millie, Montag's wife, although she was eventually cut from the film. [8] Filming began in July 2017, with martin donovan, andy mcqueen and grace lynn kung's August crew. [9] On January 11, 2018, HBO's Twitter account was released, which released a trailer for the film Fact. Fiction. It's all burning. It was released on May 19, 2018, after it premiered at the 2018 Cannes Film Festival. It was released on DVD and Blu-ray on September 18, 2018. [12] [13] Betting On rotten tomatoes news website, the film received a 33% rating of 79 reviews and an average rating of 4.9/10. The site's critical consensus reads: Fahrenheit 451 doesn't burn as brightly as classic source material, opting for cleverly ordinary smoke-blowing over hitting extra lives. [14] Metacriticon, which assigns a normalized rating to reviews, has a film score of 47 out of 100, based on 19 critics, which is a mixed or average rating. [15] IndieWire's Ben Travers gave the film a C+, writing that Michael B. Jordan and Michael Shannon make an impressive pair in an avently modernized update that still seems too conventional. [16] Todd McCarthy of The Hollywood Reporter praised the production value, but wrote that to end adaptation) as disturbing as the prediction of American life and politics in Fahrenheit 451, yet this wrinkle serves to seriously reduce the absolute need to preserve texts when it is well known that they exist elsewhere; When America gets its head straight again, there is backup to resupply the intellectually deprived. [17] In her review of RogerEbert.com, Odie Henderson noted that bradbury's ideas were directed into the factual realm, paralleling the satirical direction of the Network, which was weakened by the development of television, adding that much of the novel's shock value and allegorical power would be weakened as a result. [18] Matt Fowler, president of IGN, wrote that the film has strong performances and a dancing, flickering visual torch, but not enough to mask the script's clunkiness and the reconfiguration of the ever-relevant but still very 1950s story to fit into our 2018 specifics. [19] Entertainment Weekly's Darren Franich wrote that the film's heart was in place, but that his head must have climbed somewhere.
